The Glider Guide

Website Summary:
Sugar gliders are social, nocturnal marsupials that thrive best when kept in pairs or small groups within tall, vertical enclosures equipped with safe exercise wheels, fleece bonding pouches, and engaging toys. Their specialized care requires a grain-free diet consisting of fresh fruits, vegetables, and protein sources with a natural moisture balance, alongside constant access to clean water. Because they are nocturnal and sleep during the day, they need daily evening socialization and handling to build strong bonds. Additionally, maintaining a warm environment free of drafts, scheduling routine cage cleanings, and establishing a relationship with an experienced exotic veterinarian are vital for keeping them healthy and happy.
